STREET CLEANING SERVICE PLANNED BY JUNIOR C. OF C.

Niles' street cleaning problem is no longer a problem, it was revealed this week, when the board of directors of the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce made known plans to institute a regular weekly service.

The active young civic group, noting the disreputable condition of the town, has determined, to purchase a truck, to be painted white, as the only "street department" vehicle in the township. James Delury, active Junior chamber worker, will be employed for a day each week to clear away the rubbish on First street. As the service continues, the junior organization plans to enlarge the territory covered, to include gutters on the side streets.

The plan will be submitted to the membership for final O. K. at the next meeting.

Newark Wins League Half; Undefeated

Alvarado Second; Niles Third; Irvington In Cellar

Undefeated throughout the first half, the Newark Merchants, baseball nine managed by J. Pashote, walked away with the South County League honors when they defeated Irvington Sunday by a score of 7 to 4. The game, considered on ice by the majority of fans, took an interesting turn when Irvington threatened to upset the champions. Lazzarine and Thomas led the Newark hitters.

In the Alvarado-Decoto fraces, won by Alvarado by a score of 1 to 0, the Decoto nine, considered the underdog, almost turned the tables. They garnered five hits to Alvarado's four, in a heated pitchers' duel. Frank Mederios, effective high school pitcher, was on the mound for Decoto. Amaral did the Alvarado hurling. Jacinto, Alvarado catcher, was heavy hitter, with two out of four. Cloudene got two for four for Decoto.

The Niles-Pleasanton game, on the Niles diamond, was the most uneven of the day, Niles emerging victor with nine runs to Pleasanton's one. Muniz Fontes, Fields and Brown, all hit two for four in the Niles lineup. Silva, with two four four, led the Pleasanton batters. Home runs, by Muniz and Rose, featured the day.

Standing of the teams for the first half:

	w.	l.
NEWARK	5	0
ALVARADO	4	1
NILES	3	2
DECOTO	2	3
PLEASANTON	1	4
IRVINGTON	0	5

There will be no games Sunday, previous to the start of the second half, league officials said, to give players a chance to rest. Second half schedule will be released next week.

AFFILIATION WITH U. S. JUNIOR CHAMBER VOTED BY NILES ORGANIZATION

Action Taken At Meeting Of Local Junior Group Monday Evening

Two major decisions, one of which will bring Niles into closer contact with other sections of the nation, were reached by the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce at the regular meeting Monday night at the Peerless Grill.

The first, voted after careful consideration, will be membership in the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, through which the local group will receive information and programs of significance to the younger men of the nation. The proposal to affiliate with the national organization was made by President Sam Kerns, and was backed by J. J. Amaral, president of the county junior chamber, and Andy Jorgensen, head of the Pleasanton group. In explaining the functions of the nation-wide organization, Amaral called attention to the increasing importance of youth's opinion in the present day, and stated that the cost of membership will be returned many times over in service received.

The second decision was to incorporate the Niles group, for the complete protection of individual members. Incorporation had been suggested before, but had been delayed becaus of prohibitive cost. Through the assistance of members of the Oakland Junior Chamber of Commerce, the local civic organization finds its way clear for action on the suggestion at the present time.

The social calendar for the summer months, discussed and amplified at the Monday meeting, will consist of the following:

Friday night, June 7: A huge theater party, to be given at the Niles theater, featuring old-time movies of Niles, vaudeville, a

4TH ANNUAL POPPY DANCE AT NILES SATURDAY

Mrs. Geneva Smith, chairman of the Poppy Day committee of the Legion Auxiliary Unit No. 195, stated this week that preparations are going forward for the sale of the little red flowers, symbolizing the sacrifice of the World War dead.

Mrs. Smith said, "We of the auxiliary will be on the streets all day Saturday, May 25, with baskets of poppies which we will offer to be worn in honor of the World War dead. In exchange we will ask contributions for the welfare of disabled veterans in need and for dependents of those killed in service."

The poppies offered for sale have been made by the disabled veterans at the Unitd States Veterans' hospital, at Livermore.

The fourth annual poppy dance, major auxiliary affair, is being arranged for Saturday night, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Nell Farrington Myers. The dance is one of the outstanding spring events in this district. Music will be by Campos' Sunny Californians.

TENTATIVE PROGRAM FOR TOWNSHIP FAIR OUTLINED BY LIONS

Emphasize July Fourth Parade, Celebration; Plan New Exhibits

The second annual Washington Township Fair, to be a four-day festival in conjunction with a huge Fourth of July celebration this year, will have numerous new displays and features, according to Joe Jason, Lions Club president and general chairman of the fair. Jason's outline follows a recent meeting of all committees, at which the tentative program was drawn up.

Plans have been laid for a livestock show, a homing pigeon demonstration, display of preserved fruits, an automobile show, farm implement display, and numerous displays by smaller local businesses. Last year the major displays were arranged by township manufactures only, space being insufficient to house the retail arrangements.

This time the central attractions will be housed in a huge tent, 45 by 350 feet, on the Centerville high school athletic field, with the school gymnasium reserved for dancing, entertainment and addresses.

The Lions stress the importance of the Fourth of July parade and program, to lead off

EDITORIAL COMMENT

'Skeeter Catcher Sings

Don't blame the program committee of the Niles Chamber of Commerce, members of which had their ears burning like hot coals before R. B. Van Etten got through being "funny" at the expense of the Townsend Old Age Pension plan. When he sat down, there was all but a dead silence, rather than hilarious laughter. Sitting down was the only sensible thing he did.

Van Etten is a young man, who may or may not part his hair in the middle—but certainly his remarks may charitably be charged up to extreme verdancy. When he grows up and cuts his eye teeth in life's long, hard struggle, he will know better than to ridicule the idea of pensioning the aged.

Long ago we were standing in a crowd of men when a cripple with a long ear-trumpet, struggled by. One of the crowd gave a loud ha! ha! and sent a smart-aleck sally after the unfortunate man. Not one of the crowd of men laughed nor uttered a word, and instead of being amused were mentally damning their companion as an infernal ass. And that was the way it was at the chamber of commerce. No one openly rebuked Van Etten—he was a guest—but there was a lot of uncomplimentary thinking.

The Type is Rare in this Day and Age

Last week an unusual young man graduated from the San Francisco Teachers' College. His name was Orville Blose. Most Township Register readers know him. He graduated from Washington Union High school with honors. His home formerly was Decoto.

Blose, while a high school student, wrote Centerville news for this paper. He also acted as correspondent for the Register at Decoto. He solicited ads and sold subscriptions. During two summer vacations he worked for the writer, first as news editor, and later as circulation manager.

Every job the young man attempted he did exceptionally well. Orville had no time for play. He had neither time nor inclination for dissipation. He got along famously without what is

BURTWELL IS BOUND OVER TO SUPERIOR COURT FRIDAY

George Burtwell, Negro itinerant, must face trial in the superior court of Alameda county, on a burglary and robbery charge brought by Mrs. Elsie Soares, of Centerville after Judge J. A. Silva found evidence sufficient to warrant such action at the preliminary hearing here Friday afternoon.

Represented by H. K. Forsman, assistant public defender, Burtwell had entered a plea of not guilty at the time of his arraignment, two weeks ago. Among the exhibits produced by Assistant District Attorney Stanley Smallwood, and identified by Mrs. Soares as her property, were a piece of salt pork, a box of matches a can of sardines and $1.62 all allegedly found on Burtwell at the time of his arrest.

The accused man is alleged to have entered the Soares home, near Centerville, on April 30, and robbed Mrs. Soares after a sharp struggle with her.

UNIDENTIFIED MAN FOUND DEAD NEAR S.P. DEPOT MONDAY

Recognized As Thief Who Robbed Niles Business House Early Sunday

While burning grass along the railroad right of way near the Southern Pacific depot Monday afternoon, Garrett Moore, section foreman, and his crew of workmen, came on the body of a man, later identified by Night Watchman Arthur Roderick as that of an intoxicated itinerant whom he had ordered out of town at about five o'clock Sunday morning. The corpse, neatly dressed in a brown suit, and of medium weight, bore no marks of identification save the name "C. H. George" printed in ink inside the collar of the shirt. Authorities are making an effort to establish definite identity.

At an autopsy, performed at Botelho's Chapel of Palms Tuesday by Deputy Coroner John Lowman, death was tentatively ascribed to pneumonia. According to Roderick, the man seemed to be well-educated. He was intoxicated to such a degree that Roderick took away a bottle of wine he was carrying, and ordered him out of Niles, after seeing him on the street several times during the night. As Roderick was making his final round at about six o'clock Sunday morning, he noticed a smashed pane of glass in the Niles Tavern display window, and notified Will Cavanaugh, proprietor. Police were summoned when Cavanaugh noticed that two bottles of whisky were missing. Suspecting the man Roderick had seen a short time before, police combed the nearby jungles, where no trace was found.

It is thought that the man, with an inordinate thirst caused by his illness, had been unable to resist theft of the liquor, one bottle of which was found on him, untouched.

Authorities stated yesterday that no record of the man can be found in California. Funeral was held yesterday afternoon from the Chapel of Palms, Centerville.

A passing motorist, witnessing the accident, extricated Wassman and brought him to the office of a Niles physician, for emergency treatment. He was then taken to a Hayward hospital in the Botelho ambulance.

FLAME OF THE BORDER

By VINGIE E. ROE....

COPYRIGHT DOUBLEDAY, DORAN & Co. Inc. W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Seeking death by throwing herself from the summit of Lone Mesa, to escape dishonor, at the hands of a drunken desperado, Sonya Savarin allows herself to be rescued by her suddenly sobered and repentant attacker. The girl is a self-appointed physician to the Navajo Indians, living on an Arizona sheep ranch with her brother Serge, his wife, Lila, and their small daughter, Babs. For a year she has been engaged to Rodney Blake, wealthy New Yorker, but her heart is with the friendless Navajos and she evades a wedding.

CHAPTER II.—Sonya pulls Little Moon, wife of Two Fingers, a Navajo, through the crisis of an illness. Two Fingers is deeply grateful.

CHAPTER III.—In the desert village, shopping, Sonya again meets the man whose advances she had repulsed on Lone Mesa. He tells her he bitterly regrets his action and has never had a minute's peace since that day. Sonya is affected, but unforgiving. She hears rumors of a Border bandit "El Capitan Diablo," who crucifies his "double-crossers" and has a dire reputation as a despoiler and murderer, vaguely connecting him with her attacker.

That night, talking with Serge and Lila in the twilit patio with Babs asleep on her lap, she protested passionately against the treatment of the Indians by the whites in authority.

Serge smoked in silence, his dark eyes gazing out along the gray sage stretches that were turning purple in the falling shadows.

"Kid," he said presently, "you're the best little scout ever, but I'm afraid that some day you're going to get yourself into a peck of trouble, messing in where you don't belong."

"Messing in where I don't belong!" cried the girl hotly. "Do you call helping that mother get her young ones back for the summer vacation messing in, when she's actually grieving herself to death in her ignorance and fear? Suppose it were Lila and Babs, for instance?"

Serge moved uneasily, knocked out the dottle of his pipe.

"Well, of course—"

"Yes, of course! That's it. That's always it from the white man's viewpoint. Well, old dear, you can just hold yourself in readiness to bail me out of jail, for I may need it. I'm going over to that school and get those youngsters and take them back to that hogan, if it's the last thing I do. School is already out for the season, and that fat Satter hasn't taken the trouble to return them or to even tell the father where to come for them. Can you beat that for sheer downright meanness? If you don't need the car, I'll take it and go over to the school sometime this week—maybe day after tomorrow. O. K., Serge?"

"O. K., honey. I'll begin looking round for bail in the meantime in case you find something you can use as an excuse to hop the school authorities."

Sonya was as good as her word. On Wednesday of that week she took the disreputable old car and set out across the wild and lonely land in the general direction of the government school for which Satter was the gathering agent.

The large rooms were sweetly cool in the early summer heat, and she took off her hat and leaned back in her chair in grateful enjoyment.

She had not long to wait, for presently the superintendent, a Mr. Claude Spartow, came in briskly with extended hand.

"Why, Miss Savarin—Doctor Savarin, I should say, though the austere title don't seem to belong to a girl like you—this is a pleasure, I assure you! Come right into my office."

He led her into his private office, a spacious comfortable place, its walls lined with filing cases, and pulled up the deepest big chair.

"There!" he said. "That's better. Now relax. You must be tired."

"No," said Sonya, "I'm not, and I'm in somewhat of a hurry. I've come for the two children of the Indian, Hosteen Nez, over in the big cut beyond Lone Mesa, just on the line of the Reservation. This case is rather pitiful, Mr. Spartow, and I'd like to enlist your attention to it. Mr. Satter will remember. I came upon him taking the children, not so many weeks back—very near the end of the term—and the parents are 'wild Indians.' They don't understand either the necessity or the methods employed in the matter of giving up their children, and I begged off the littlest one from Mr. Satter. The mother had run herself nearly into collapse, hanging on the buckboard's tail. She is in a serious condition now, with her grief over their disappearance. Doesn't eat. Looks awful. And Mr. Satter had forgotten to tell them where to come for the children. It is rather hard, when you think of it, on parents, you know, either red or white. As it would take the Hosteen some days to get here and back with his horses to fetch them, I'd like to take the children to them myself. I will be responsible to you for them."

As the girl talked the man's sharp eyes regarded her with an alertness of expression that changed to guardedness as she mentioned Satter's lapse of memory. Now he leaned toward her, smiling.

"Why, how kind of you, my dear Miss Savarin!" he said. "Few women of this day would take so much trouble for ignorant Indians. Of course you may take the little ones. But surely you're not starting back today? You'll stay with us for the night and get a good early start tomorrow, if I have my way."

"Oh, my, no!" said Sonya. "I'll get on my way as quickly as possible. Will it take long to get them ready?"

"If you really think you must go," he said regretfully, "I'll have them made ready at once. It won't take long."

The two were presently brought to her, their belongings in a neat bundle. They still looked as they had looked that day in the buckboard, like frightened quail.

Sonya smiled at them, took their unresisting hands.

Then she smiled at Spartow.

"I thank you, sir," she said gently, "and I shall not forget your kindness in letting me take them. I hope you'll ask Mr. Satter to tell the fathers next time, will you, please, Mr. Spartow?"

Mr. Spartow returned the smile with a look that promised to ask the government for a million-dollar loan if she thought it necessary.

And presently Sonya Savarin was driving down across the illimitable levels with joy in her heart and the hushed little Navajos huddled in against her with instinctive trust.

She was thinking what fun she would have watching Cactus Flower's haggard face when she took them in to the hidden hogan in the canyon.

CHAPTER V

Deep Things Begin to Glimmer.

THAT little matter proved almost more than she could stand, however, for the Indian mother, watching the east continually since her previous visit, having taken her advice literally, collapsed at sight of her children, and Sonya had a brisk half hour in bringing her round again.

But all's well that ends well, and the girl finally rode away, leading her extra horse with a smile on her lips and the deep light in her eyes that Rod Blake called fanaticism.

Maybe it was, but it made her foolishly happy to see this poor family united again. And Hosteen Nez had looked over his woman's head at her exactly as Two Fingers had and called her Blue South Woman in the Sun. It was all he said, but it was pregnant with deep things, and Sonya knew it so.

So she opened her lips and sang. And then she came to the canyon's mouth and caught her breath sharply, for a man sat there on a golden horse. He looked like a young god with the sunlight on his hair, and his eyes as blue as the heavens, and the grave look on his handsome face.

"Forgive me," he said quickly, "for being in your trail again."

"Why?" she said as quickly. "It is free country."

"Yes, I know. But I promised to stay away."

"That was from Lone Mesa."

"The intent was everywhere. I meant it, too—was goin'—going to keep my word, but I seem to come back regardless."

Sonya sat and looked at him steadily, her sweet face grave, too. He bore her scrutiny quietly, though a muscle twitched in his cheek, and there was a seeming of strain in his face.

"I've thought a lot about you," the girl said presently: "why, I don't just know. I shouldn't, by all the rules of my life's game, but I have. Tell me—if you care to—where have you been since I saw you last? Where do you live?"

He moved in his saddle, laid his hands on his pommel.

"Miss Savarin," he said, "I can't tell you. A lot of places for th' first question—nowhere for th' last one. I told you before, I wasn't fit to talk to. I am a drifter, if you like, just goin' through th' country."

"Oh, no, you're not," said Sonya, "the day you came in the store you were familiar with the place and had been there before. Don't you think I know a few things. Well, we won't talk of that," she added gently, "where are you going now?"

"Why, nowheres. That is—I was just ridin' around for exercise, sort of. Un d'Oro, here, needs a lot of exercise."

He smiled and patted the shining neck at his saddle bow.

"Un d'Oro—Golden One," said Sonya. "What a lovely name. And what a wonderful horse. He's the most beautiful thing I ever saw done up in horsehide. You love him, don't you?"

The man's face lighted as with inner fire.

"Well—some," he said.

For a while they sat in silence, at a loss for something to talk about, and then Sonya told him about Cactus Flower and how Mr. Satter had taken her children.

"D—n!" he said flushing. "Excuse me—but some people just ain't human. I'd like to see that agent on—"

He stopped, and Sonya felt her heart contract, for she knew he had almost said "a cross."

What was this man? What was in the soul of him? What strange contradictions? What savageries and contritions, what sympathies and cruelties? What connection did he have with those awful retributions across the Border of which the Servant had hinted? What did the strange old man know about him? The henchman of Beelzebub he had called him—for no other in all this country answered to the description of the Blue-eyed One with Bronze-colored Hair. Sonya felt cold, as if a wind of portent had blown across her spirit. And swift on its heels a sadness came, the odd, unaccountable feeling of personal loss and sorrow which had assailed her that night at Myra's.

She shook herself, mentally and actually, and was angry at herself again, and when this man spoke she listened, forgetting.

"I'm a violent man, Miss Savarin," he said strangely, "and my life won't bear th' light—but a thing like that makes my blood boil. There ain't no manner of use hurting something that can't fight back, and a woman an' a child—well, they're set aside, someway, like a starvin' kitten, or a dog that no one wants. No kind of a man would do them a harm—not an' be a man."

"You think that—honestly?" said Sonya. "Right from your heart?"

"Why, of course," he said surprised. "Don't you?"

"Yes, oh yes, a woman feels like that, but men are different. I just wondered."

"Have you been back to Lone Mesa?" he asked presently.

"No," said Sonya, "I haven't. I've been pretty busy. Housecleaning and sewing. Have you?"

"Twicet. At night. Watched th' moon come up across th' desert, and it was wonderful. A man can't describe it—like new life comin' to a dead world."

"I know," said Sonya, "I've seen it from there myself."

"Alone? My G—d, Miss Savarin, you shouldn't be goin' around this country by yourself like that!"

"Why not? I'm perfectly safe. Everyone knows me and there isn't a Navajo, drunk or otherwise, who'd say a word to me."

"Not th' Navvys, no, ma'am," he said painfully, "but they ain't all there are, you know."

How well she knew! But she was sorry the inference had been drawn.

"As for being drunk—will you believe me when I say I haven't touched a glass or a bottle since—since that day—on th' cliff? Every time I've tried, your face has come before me plain as plain—the white fury of it, the courage—G—d! I choke an' quit tryin'."

He was looking at her earnestly, and Sonya did not question a word he said. Instead she smiled, and the coldness left her heart in a racing flood.

"I'm glad," she said. "Didn't I tell you it was never too late to look up? Didn't I?"

"Sure you did, but that don't mean anything in this case, I'm just telling you that your face stopped my liquor."

"It'll stop a lot of things for you," the girl said in a rush and was astonished at herself.

"What—do you mean?" he said slowly.

"I—oh, I don't know!" said Sonya, trembling, "only I know you've got to stop—stop that Border stuff. That you've got to change—the leopard spots."

"You," he said, wetting his lips, which had suddenly lost their color, "you—want me to—do that?"

"Yes," said Sonya thickly, "yes."

"Then, by G—d!" he said through his teeth, "I'll—"

What he meant to say was not apparent, for at that moment they both heard what they had been too tensely strung to hear before—the roar of a motor in the sky. A small gray ship slipped down directly over their heads and dropped to a landing on the desert out beyond. The man took one look, and reaching out an arm, he pushed Sonya and Darkness back into the canyon's mouth, Un d'Oro shielding them both. The touch of his breast against her shoulder, the scent of him, tobacco and sweat, the nearness of his bronze cheek, sent a wave of weakness over the girl.

"Get back!" he rasped, "for th' love of heaven! Go in deep, please, an' don't come out till it's gone."

Then he had struck his heels to Un d'Oro's shining flanks and was out like a flash across the sand.

For a moment Sonya sat where he had left her, shaking as with a chill, bewildered and a little scared.

What was this?

What had driven the blood from his face?

And why did he go straight to the plane if he was frightened?

Here was the answer to some of her questions, that she knew instinctively. If only she could go out there herself! She could not even see from where Darkness stood, so prompt and so efficient had been his action. But she must see. Sonya's lips set, as they did when she faced a crisis for her skill, and she dismounted and, dropping Darkness' rein, went forward carefully the few steps that separated her from the sheer edge of the canyon's mouth. Taking off her hat, she carefully leaned along the rock until her line of vision reached the open and the plane. And what she saw bewildered her more than she had been before. The Blue-eyed one was off Un d'Oro, and one man was on the ground beside him, while another was bent down in the after cockpit. This one rose, as she looked, and gave something to the other, who in turn handed it to the rider.

And he, with care and swiftness, put it in his saddlebags.

stranger climbed back in the forward cockpit, the plane, which had never stopped its engine, roared a moment, slid along the sand a little way, picked up its tail and took off. And Un d'Oro was loping away, headed for the town.

After a long while Sonya climbed back on Darkness and went soberly home. She had much to think about and was doing it with a vengeance.

For one thing, why had the feel of this man's arm across her breast, the nearness of his face, shot through her so strange fire?

Once before his arm had been about her, dragging her from Darkness' back, his face had been close to hers, and she had been filled with such unbearable rage and hate that she could have killed him on the spot.

What was the matter with her? Where was her character, her principles, her condemnation of wrong?

SCOUTERS, PARENTS, WILL RECEIVE INSTRUCTION

Plans to institute classes in Washington township, through which scouters, parents and Boy Scout officials may become better acquainted with their duties in the support and administration of the Boy Scout movement, were discussed Thursday night at the regular meeting of the district scout committee at the Centerville court house. Allen G. Norris, district chairman, presided.

The assembled scouters listened to a talk by Leo Wuesthoff, field executive of the Oakland area council, who told of scouter training, and methods of instruction. Following his talk, the committee voted to establish a system of scouter training, and decided that meetings would be held quarterly, in conjunction with the regular district meetings, at which instruction will be given by regular instructors sent from the Oakland headquarters.

At the quarterly meetings, each group will be divided into the specific units, i. e., finance, training, publicity, camping, court of honor, etc., for detailed instruction on routine. The parents of the scouts who are uged to take an interest in the meets, will be given special instruction and problems. The first of these quarterly meetings will be held at the Centerville court house on Thursday evening, June 20, at 8 p. m.

In speaking of the new plan, Allen G. Norris, chairman, stated that the importance of it cannot be too greatly stressed, particularly from the point of view of the parents, in whose hands the first responsibilty to the boys lies. He urged a greater interest in scouting on the part of mothers and fathers, and asked that they attend the meet on June 20, and acquaint themselves with the study plan.

CENTERVILLE NEWS

FUTURE FARMERS WIN AWARDS SATURDAY

Three Washington Union High school Future Farmers were given awards at the South Coast Region Project Competition and Field Day for the Future Farmers, held at Hollister Saturday. The competition covered dairy cattle, community projects, horticultural projects and non-ownership projects. The local chapter was awarded two first prizes, in addition to the three individual awards made to members.

A first place was achieved for the best group of community projects, and for the best individual community project. The latter was the pea project, being completed at present by the Centerville chapter.

In the individual competition, Billy Foster was awarded second prize in dairy projects, for his 15 fine dairy calves. Albert Pine achieved a second place in the horticultural division with his fruit tree undertaking. Anthony Silva was second-prize winner with his experimental work in corn, potatoes and cover crops.

In addition to their laurels in the project competition, the local boys upset the dope in the athletic events by trouncing Santa Cruz, favorites, in the swimming events. John Berchem, Dan Juarez, Bob Whipple and Joe Keltner, paddled away with the honors.

Of further interest in the chapters news, is the recent selection of Anthony Silva and Ray Oliveira, as candidates for the degree of State Farmer, to be awarded by Governor Merriam at the state fair this year. The boys were selected for the honor at state convention, recently held at San Luis Obispo.

MASQUERADE BALL IS ENJOYED BY HOME MEMBERS MONDAY

The first anniversary of the Happy Hour Club, at the Masonic Home, Decoto, was celebrated Monday evening with a masquarade ball with other members of the home as invited guests. Will Carey, of Long Beach, was master of ceremonies. Music was by the club orchestra —Leonard Georges, John Hedley, Elmer Barnes and John T. Yarrington.

The grand march was led by John Carey and Mrs. R. C. Peppin, and directed by Superintendent Hartman. Prizes for the most grotesque costumes, for women, went to Mrs. Will Carey, for a wierd costume made of gunny bags and Mrs. R. C. Peppin, for her Queen Elizabeth costume. For the men, first prize went to I. H. Bentley who was attired as a shepherd, and G. M. Cole, who represented a New England farmer.

Following the ball, the members of the club enjoyed a banquet in the basement of the south wing. The dinner was financed by funds from the Happy Hour treasury. The table, arranged in the form of a Maltese cross, was attractively decorated. Birthday cakes, duly embellished, were cut with ceremony.

The club which has fifty-four members, as compared with fifty-five last year, has "hops" each Monday night, from 7 to 9, with refreshments once a month. Officers are: Will Carey, president; George Russell, vice-president, and Mrs. Julia Johnson secretary-treasurer.

The Masonic lodge at Monterey, Mathew Stahl, master, visited the home Sunday. C. Haskell Warren, past master, directed the excursion, which included the ladies.

Services Sunday were conducted by Rev. C. M. Bish, of Richmond.

AIR CONDITIONING IN REFRIGERATORS KEEPS FOODS BEST

California manufacturers of ice refrigerators are preparing for the biggest year in their history with the approach of warmer weather throughout the state.

In a national survey based on past performance and current sales quotas, distributors anticipate that three-quarters of a million new type ice refrigerators will be purchased in 1935.

The growing popularity of ice refrigerators despite the competition of mechanical substitutes, is attributed to the application of the principle of air conditioning to new style refrigerators, coupled with extensive use of newspaper advertising to acquaint the public with new developments.

The ice industry, undergoing a process of modernization, has brought forth a new and better line, which plus intelligent sales methods, has made, and is making, records.

Miss Marian Fogg attended the horse show at Mills College Friday afternoon. She returned to Niles with Mrs. J. R. Whipple and Mrs. J. C. Shinn who were in attendance at the affair as representatives of the Toyon Branch of the Children's hospital.

Fire Permits Necessary To Burn Grass, Rubbish

Home owners and ranchers who have occasion to light fires of any size should first secure fire permits from local fire chiefs, according to word from Fred Rogers, Centerville chief, Tuesday.

Rogers explained that the ruling has been made for the protection of those who light the fires, inasmuch as they are liable for suit if sparks from their blaze cause damage. He stressed the need of care, particularly this year, in view of the heavy grass growth.

Permits may be secured from the following, Chief Alves, Niles; Chief Pashote, Newark; Chief Bendel, Decoto; Chief Whitfield, Mission San Jose, and either from Chief Fred Rogers or Assistant Chief Frank Madruga, at Centerville.

CONTEST JUDGE

Roland Bendel, of Decoto, was one of the five judges in the annual model contest of the Alameda County Engineers Model Club, at Oakland, Tuesday night. Miniature trains, boats and so on, were entered. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison Green, formerly of Niles, attended.

Editorial Comment

NORMAN H. PARKS, Publisher Register

known as a "bad habit." He led the Sunday school at Decoto, and believed in, and lived, a Christian life.

Graduating from high school, he entered the University of California, and, because his family's circumstances precluded any financial assistance, from the beginning he made his own way. True, he had no membership in a Sigma Chi, Kappa Alpha or Phi Gamma Delta to bandy around that less fortunate might envy his connection with fashionable fraternity houses, but when he finished at Berkeley his parents had no notes to meet on his account, nor did he. He made his budget balance every month, by odd jobs done mostly before other university students had even grudgingly gotten out of bed.

For three years Blose made his way. Then his father died. So it devolved upon the young man not only to support himself, but carry the major burden of the Blose household, consisting of a mother and two minor children. For almost two years he has been doing this, and not complaining. Now his schooling is over, and he is ready to teach.

The writer believes that the school district that employs this young man will be fortunate. His type is rare in these days. He has character and learning, and his personal life would be a good example for the children under him. Moreover, there would be neither time nor money wasted in a department over which he presided. He deserves a great deal of consideration.

The writer does not know whether Orville has as yet secured a teaching contract. Up to a few days ago he had not. He has no political pull, nor powerful friends to intercede in his behalf. It does not seem conceivable, though, that one so worthy, so capable, so clean, should fail to land a faculty membership. Perhaps some reader of this editorial knows of a school vacancy. If so, it would be a fine thing if that party would say a good word for this young man. He may be reached at 6458 Outlook avenue, Oakland. His telephone is Trinidad 2398.

HUMOROUS ADDRESS HEARD BY NILES GIVIC GROUP

Clearing away of weeds on First street, in the narrow strip of property bordering the pavement, has been finished by county workers it was pointed out Monday at the meeting of the Niles Chamber of Commerce. The strip county property, had been a subject of discussion by the civic group recently, when merchants asked that future cleanup activities be extended to include the H-I block. The block in question was cleared up this time.

Following his report on the baseball games in the south county league play, H. L. Scott told of activity under way to have school busses rerouted so as to avoid use of the Bell ranch bridge, considered dangerous by the Decoto Junior Chamber of Commerce. Scott stated that the high school board of trustees, after a study of the matter, have decided that the bridge crossing is less hazardous than numerous railroad crossings encountered in suggested alternate routes. The matter, including the suggestions of the Decoto civic group, has been referred to the traffic department of the highway division for study and report, Scott said, adding that the board will follow recommendations of that body.

Speaker for the day was R. B. Van Etten, of Oakland, who amused the group with an address which parodied the Townsend Old Age Pension plan. The speaker was introduced by H. F. Grey, often a visitor at the meetings. Other guests were T. J. Powers, of Irvington, and Roland Bendel, of Decoto.

The three-minute speaker at the next meeting will be A. J. Rathbone, high school principal.

Sunday, June 30: County Junior Chamber of Commerce meeting, with Niles as hosts, to be in the form of a huge all-day barbecue, to be held at Rose's park. Ed. Rose, member of the organization, offered his park for the occasion, and stated that he would repair the road leading into it. He said that the park has not been used for several months, due to woodcutting activities in the canyon, but that it could be put into shape with a little work, which the members voted to do themselves.

As one of the first fall social activities, the group voted to have a moonlight dance at Stonywood park, in Niles canyon, on the night of August 17. Fred Mosegaard, member, and proprietor of the park, stated that he would make arrangements to handle a huge crowd.

In addition to their other activities, the organization is working continuously on other matters, some of which are: Construction of a float for the July Fourth Lions Club parade; construction of a relief map of the vicinity of Niles, as a fair display; completion of the huge hill sign; arrangement of a suitable representation for the Livermore rodeo parade; distribution of placards to Niles business houses, to ensure uniform closing on holidays.

With the huge "Niles" on Walpert's hill nearly finished, the organization voted a life membership to O. E. Walpert, owner of the hill, for his generousity in donating the land. It is the first life membership to ge given by the new group.

A Niles clean-up week was voted down at the meeting, but a plan to furnish a truck at regular intervals, to assist in the cleaning of First street, was laid on the table. The plan followed James Delury's offer to clean the street once a week, without pay of any kind. Milton Fournier offered to assist him.

Committeemen appointed by Kerns: Participation in Livermore parade; Milton Fournier, chairman, who will select assistants. Night watchman fund collectors for May: Manuel Silva and Briart Joseph.

The next meeting will be held at the Florence restaurant, on Monday night, June 3.

ENTERTAIN

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Shinn, Jr., were hosts to a number of their friends at dinner Saturday night. The guests were: Mrs. R. Jelliff, Miss Marian Fogg, Miss Lurena Chenery, Marshall Kimball, Harry Stevenson and Paul Donovan.

To be held on August 2 and 3, the festival will feature two parades, both march the length of First street; dancing in an outdoor pavilion, to be constructed at the south end of Second street; fireworks, a huge barbecue, concessions and auctions will be part of the attractions, Rego said.

The major part of the celebration will take place in the large field at the end of Second street, near the Corpus Christi church.

Other officials helping in the preliminary arrangements are: Jerry Robello, vice president; John Rey, secretary; Manuel Oliver, treasurer and Tony Fields, Marshall.

Among other organizations who will have booths at the festival will be the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Two Livermore men whose names were not learned, miraculously escaped injury Monday night, when their car crashed through the fence on the Escobar hill road, near Mission San Jose, and hurtled down a forty-foot embankment. The car was demolished, but neither of the occupants suffered more than scratches.

Howard Rose, of Rose garage, suffered a sprained ankle when he stumbled down the embankment, while helping to raise the damaged machine to the road.
